Introduction

Throughout history, match play has been an important competitive component in golf, and the PGA TOUR has consistently used the format to determine champions. Today, the International Federation of PGA Tours, of which the PGA TOUR is a member, runs the World Golf Championships-Accenture Match Play Championship, the only match-play event on the 2013-14 PGA TOUR schedule.

Since 1916, the PGA TOUR has played 85 official match-play tournaments, with a good number of those champions coming from the PGA Championship, which used a match-play format for all its tournaments between 1916 and 1957.

This book is only focusing on match-play tournaments from the beginning of the modern era of professional golf, 1916—the year of the PGA of America’s creation—even though there were a few match-play events prior to then, most notably two years of the BMW Championship (nee Western Open), in 1910 and 1911.

Match play as a competitive model took hold in the 1920s, with 14 official events on the schedule. The 1930s saw 29 events, and 1932 alone featured five match-play competitions. The format fell in popularity in the 1940s, partly because of the onset of World War II, with only 11 events, followed by eight in 1950—the same decade that the PGA of America decided to go to a medal-play format for the PGA Championship. For the 1960s, there were no official match-play tournaments, the only extended period in the TOUR’s history when match play was dormant. The TOUR resurrected the format for three years, at the 1971, 1972 and 1973 U.S. Professional Match Play Championships in North Carolina. After those three tournaments, match play went dark again until 1984’s Seiko-Tucson Match Play Championship, which enjoyed a three-year run in Arizona. The format returned to the PGA TOUR schedule for good in 1999 with the creation of the World Golf Championships-Accenture Match Play Championship that has been held in California and Australia and, currently, in the Greater Tucson area since 2007.

This book is designed to allow users to see how players throughout history have performed in match-play competition, allowing for the comparison of players from different generations. We hope it helps you in your coverage of the TOUR in general and the Accenture Match Play Championship specifically.
